history bites

LOCAL HISTORY IN BITE FORM

Everyone has seen modern summer kitchens; large cooking spaces outside of the house for backyard entertainment. But back in the 19th century these were actually very common in the home. The main reason for these separate cooking spaces was to separate the heat of the fires from the rest of the house.

Car tires have gone through many changes until the mid 20th century. Back in the early 1900's wooden radially-spoked wheels were common. But the main problem? The wood expanded and shrank depending on the weather. People could tighten the wheels multiple ways, but it was common to drive them in to the closest body of water to let them sit for the day.

Fishing was more than just a hobby for many in this area. It was a primary source of food. Large scale stocking programs started in the 1950's after concerning declines of fish populations. Algonquin Park was ahead of the times with stocking their lakes before the creation of animal ecology as a science. As more lakes became accessible it became a strategy to stock lakes as the demand for recreational fishing increased.
